Part-Time Academic Postings - Early Modern Studies Program
Posted by Early Modern Studies Program on April 2, 2020 in Job Postings

The University of King's College's Early Modern Studies Program invites applications for a part-time instructor who would be responsible for teaching the following course:

EMSP 2320: Witchcraft in Early Modern Europe

The period of European history from 1500 to 1800 saw the rise of modern science and philosophy. It was also a period in which thousands of witch trials and executions were carried out. This course will seek to understand how these seemingly contradictory developments could have occurred simultaneously. The course will examine changing conceptions of the witch and witchcraft in their historical, intellectual, cultural, religious, and political contexts. We will pay special attention to early modern notions of gender and sexuality and their influence on the witch hunts and witch trials.

The class will be offered Monday, 5:25-8:25 p.m., Winter term (January-April 2021).

The successful candidate will be responsible for teaching 3 hours of classes per week, evaluating assignments, attending staff meetings, supervising teaching assistants, and holding office hours. This position reports to the Director of the Program.

Qualifications and Experience:

Applicants should possess, as a minimum requirement, a master's degree in early modern studies or a relevant discipline or field of research. Some expertise in the history of witchcraft will be an asset. Prior experience teaching at the University level is required.

Pay Rate: Remuneration is based upon qualifications and experience.

To apply: Applicants must submit a cover letter stating their qualifications for, and interest in, teaching the class, a curriculum vitae, two confidential letters of reference and evidence of teaching effectiveness by Friday, May 1, 2020 to:

The University of King's College's Early Modern Studies Program invites applications for a part-time instructor who would be responsible for teaching the following course:

EMSP 3430 Theories of Punishment: Retribution and Social Control in Early Modern Thought

Among the distinctive characteristics of early modern thought are new conceptions of retribution and social control. In this course, we shall examine a number of texts which reflect the diversity of philosophical and theological approaches to law and punishment, both human and divine. We begin with a consideration of pre-modern and/or non-western approaches to these issues. We then explore the various early modern reactions to and departures from these approaches, including the writings of Protestant thinkers and political philosophers before, during, and after the Enlightenment. Finally, we shall consider Foucault's "normalization thesis" to see if it illuminates our understanding of early modern thought on punishment.

The class will be offered Monday 5:35-8:25 p.m., Fall term (September-December 2020).

The successful candidate will be responsible for teaching 3 hours of classes per week, evaluating assignments, attending staff meetings, and holding office hours. If eligible, the candidate may be required to supervise a teaching assistant. This position reports to the Director of the Program.

Qualifications and Experience:

Applicants should possess, as a minimum requirement, a master's degree in early modern studies or a relevant discipline or field of research. Some expertise in the history and theories of punishment will be an asset. Prior experience teaching at the University level is required.

Part-Time Academic Posting - Contemporary Studies Program
Posted by Contemporary Studies Program on March 25, 2020 in Job Postings

The University of King's College's Contemporary Studies Program invites applications for a part-time instructor who would be responsible for teaching the following course:

CTMP 2115.03 The Idea of Race in Philosophy, Literature, and Art
What is race? How does racism impact our sense of self and the communities in which we live? The first part of this class examines the emergence of the modern idea of race, in relation to European expansionism, philosophical ideas of the time, and the development of science. The second part of the class focuses on contemporary conceptions of race and their relations to culture, history, ideology, science, and everyday lived experience. We consider contemporary debates on race and racism in the works of thinkers, writers, artists, and social activists, reflecting on the concept of white privilege and on the intersections of race, class, and gender.

The class will be offered Tuesday & Thursday, 1:05-2:25 p.m., Winter term (January-April 2021).

The successful candidate will be responsible for teaching 3 hours of classes per week, evaluating assignments, attending staff meetings,

SpTop: War Crimes Trials

Department: Department of History, Saint Mary's University.

Semester: Winter 2021, 01/06-04/20

Schedule: TR, 2:30-3:45 pm

Academic Calendar Description:

This course follows the evolution of the laws of war and war crimes trials as they have been altered and applied against the changing nature of warfare from the penning of the Lieber Code in 1863 through to the adoption of the Rome Statute in 1998 which provided the legal basis for the International Criminal Court. It explores historical negotiations, legal precedents, and investigates how and when the laws of war have been tested, ignored, and enforced for prevention and punishment in global and civil wars, wars of independence, as well as ethnic conflicts throughout the twentieth century. Through lectures, readings, research, and discussion groups, students will be exposed to the legal, diplomatic, strategic, and human rights mechanisms of restricting warfare, and identify the considerable problems that have emerged from efforts to prevent war crimes or seek justice in the aftermath of their repeated commission.

Qualifications:

Preferred applicant must possess a PhD in History and have experience World War History at the university level. Candidates with publications and/or demonstrated research in the field will be preferred.

Title: Part-time Academic Posting: HISTORY OF SCIENCE AND TECHNOLOGY PROGRAMME

Description:

PART-TIME ACADEMIC POSTING IN ENVIRONMENTAL HISTORY

University of King's College

Halifax, Nova Scotia, Canada B3H 2A1

POSTING DATE: July 28, 2016

APPLICATION DEADLINE: August 19, 2016

PAY RATE: Half-class stipend.

WORK ASSIGNMENT

The History of Science and Technology Programme (HOST) is looking for a part-time instructor to teach the course HSTC 2210: Engineering the Planet: The Anthropocene Era, from Prehistory to Today's Global Crisis during the 2017 Winter semester (the course's weekly schedule will be determined in consultation with the successful candidate). The course is meant as an introduction to environmental history suitable for both majors and students looking for an interesting and meaningful elective. Its calendar entry reads as follows:

"Technological developments have had such a fundamental impact on the environment that geologists are now contemplating the idea that the planet might have entered a new geological epoch, the Anthropocene, in which humans would be the main geophysical force at play. This course critically examines this debate by offering a historical survey of the impact of human technology on the environment, from prehistory to early 21st century. Attention will also be given as to how social, political, cultural, and economic factors have influenced this history."

The successful candidate will be responsible for all aspects of teaching and administering the class (including advertising, office hours, etc.). Time will be required beforehand for pre-course preparation, and afterwards for marking and administration duties. A course outline has been established, but can be modified.

QUALIFICATIONS

Applicants should possess a post-graduate degree and teaching experience in History, Philosophy, or Sociology of Science and Technology or related field of studies or possess other professional qualifications deemed suitable for teaching in the programme. Previous university-level teaching is required.

All applications should include a cover letter, a curriculum vita (including evidence of teaching effectiveness), and the names and contact information of two referees. Applications should be submitted by August 19, 2016 to

Sharon Brown, Administrative Secretary
History of Science and Technology Programme
University of King's College
Halifax NS B3H 2A1
Canada
email: Sharon.Brown@ukings.ca

phone: (902) 422-1271, ext. 204

Although candidates of all nationalities are encouraged, priority will be given to Canadian citizens and permanent residents. The University of King's College is an equal opportunity employer; women, visible minorities and members of other underrepresented groups are particularly encouraged to apply. POSTING DATE: February 11, 2015

APPLICATION DEADLINE: February 25, 2015

PAY RATE: Half-class stipend, according to C.U.P.E. agreement

WORK ASSIGNMENT

The History of Science and Technology Programme (HOST) is looking for part-time instructors to teach a number of courses during the 2015-16 academic year. HOST is especially interested in academics that could teach the following courses:

- HSTC 1200: Introduction to the History of Science
- HSTC 2204: The Darwinian Revolution
- HSTC 2810: History of Chinese Science and Technology
- HSTC 2210: Engineering the Planet: The Anthropocene Era, from Prehistory to Today's Global Crisis (Environmental History)
- HSTC 3611: Brewing Science

Applicants can also propose their own courses (in which case they should submit a course syllabus with their application) or offer to teach other HOST courses (for a complete list, see the university's calendar at:

http://www.ukings.ca/files/u16/Academic_Calendar_September_25_2014.pdf).

The successful candidates will be responsible for all aspects of teaching and administering their classes, including advertising, reading lists and course readers, websites, lectures, test preparation and evaluation. They should also be available for consultation with students, be willing and able to supervise teaching assistants, and be available for teaching staff meetings. The positions report to the Director of the Programme.

QUALIFICATIONS

Applicants should possess a post-graduate degree and a strong research and teaching experience in History, Philosophy, or Sociology of Science and Technology or related field of studies or possess other academic and/or professional qualifications deemed suitable for teaching in the programme. Previous university-level teaching is required.

All applications should include a curriculum vitae, two confidential letters of reference and evidence of teaching effectiveness. If you are interested in the above position, please apply in writing by the application deadline to:
